To whom it may concern,

I disagree with the proposed remedy of the Microsoft Anti-trust trial. This remedy would seem to extend, not limit, Microsoft's Monopolistic power. Any remedy should inately decrease their Monopolistic power. Maybe an alternative would be to make Microsoft fund billions of dollars worth of competitors software, such as Apple, Linux, and StarOffice. That would be a remedy which would increase competition at least. Or even better, would be to break Microsoft into two companies: Operating Systems and Applications. The Operating System business would then be enjoined from entering into any other business ventures outside of the Operating System arena.

thank you,
